FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

FAYETTEVILLE, NC - Mable Murray, a Cumberland County 4-H volunteer leader for 17 years, was recognized June 18 by the Cumberland County Board of Commissioners for her contributions to youth development. Murray was presented with the Cumberland Cares Recognition Award during the board's regular meeting.

During the years, Murray has led the Murray 4-H Club and encouraged 50 youth to participate. She also volunteers though the North Carolina 4-H Achieving Continued Education (ACE) Master Volunteer Program. Murray earned the highest level of recognition within that program and now specializes in assisting with the 4-H presentations program.

Murray recently received the N.C. 4-H State Volunteer Award at the N.C. 4-H Volunteer Leaders Conference.

In nominating Murray for the award, Angela Shaver, the 4-H and Youth Development Extension Agent, cited Murray's "caring nature, her heart for children and her constant smile."

The Cumberland Cares award recognizes an individual, group or agency that has made an outstanding contribution toward a better quality of life for the county's citizens.

The 4-H program is the youth education program of North Carolina Cooperative Extension. To learn more about 4-H in Cumberland County, call 910-321-6860 or visit the Cooperative Extension website at http://cumberland.ces.ncsu.edu/.
